

FIELD BRIEF

Photography & case studies.

A simple, practical guide to capturing real projects — the proof that turns a strong brand into won work.

What to capture on a live job.

You don't need a studio — a recent phone or a half-day with a local photographer is enough. Aim for a handful of strong, well-lit frames per project. Shoot in landscape and portrait so the same job works on the website, in documents and on social.

THE WIDE SHOT

The finished space from a doorway or corner — partitions, ceilings and finishes together. This is the hero frame.

THE CRAFT / DETAIL

Close-ups that show quality — a clean partition junction, a fire-door set, joinery, a crisp ceiling line.

THE TEAM AT WORK

Crew on site, in branded PPE, mid-task. People make the work feel real and safe — get their okay first.

BEFORE & IN-PROGRESS

A shell or strip-out, then framing and boarding. A simple before/after is some of the most persuasive proof there is.

SCALE & SEQUENCE

A long run of partitions or a full floor — shots that show you can deliver volume, not just a single room.

BRANDING ON SITE

Hoarding, site board or a liveried vehicle in frame — ties the project back to EDM.

Quick rules. Natural light where possible · tidy the frame first (cables, offcuts, bins) · shoot at the highest resolution your device allows · keep the originals — don't only save compressed copies · capture 6–10 keepers per job, not fifty.

Turning a job into a case study.

Use the project-profile template in the brand pack. Each case study is short — three tight paragraphs and a set of facts. Specifics win; keep it concrete and avoid adjectives.

01 The brief

What the client needed — the scope, the constraints, the programme pressure, the standard expected.

02 What we delivered

The trades self-performed, how interface risk was removed, how quality and programme were held.

03 The outcome

Handed over on programme and snag-free; any measurable result or a line of client feedback.

CAPTURE THESE FACTS ON EVERY JOB

CLIENT / SECTOR Main contractor or end client · office, retail, healthcare, etc.

LOCATION & VALUE City and country · approximate contract value (a band is fine)

SCOPE & PROGRAMME Trades delivered · duration and completion date

RESULT On time / snag-free / repeat client — whatever is true and provable

Where it goes. Each finished case study drops straight into the website projects section, strengthens the capability statement for tenders, and gives you ready-made social posts. Three to five strong ones is enough to change how the brand lands.
